Ben walked slowly up the stairs, dragging his school bag behind him. He opened his bedroom door and sank onto the bed. His eyelids felt heavy and his limbs ached.

Mr Stewart stormed into the classroom, slamming the door behind him. On the front row, the Year 7s shrank further into their seats and lowered their heads.

Jenny sat on the hard, plastic chair. Her heart was racing and she noticed that she had been biting her nails again. All around, were other people, waiting quietly. The room smelt of antiseptic.
